

The Association to Preserve Cape Cod supports the efforts of the Town of Orleans to regulate the use and application of pesticides in town. The use of pesticides contributes to the decline in beneficial species and is a major factor in the decline of essential pollinators. Land management practices that work with nature rather than chemical interventions result on healthier ecosystems and improved water quality. We applaud the town for its efforts.